COMMON PEOPLE NOT CONSULTED

Idea About Constitution Being by the People is Erroneous, Says Chicago Jurist.

CHICAGO, Dec. 19.—"The popular notion that the federal constitution was created and adopted by all the people is a misconception," said Judge Wm. H. McSurely of the superior court of Cook county, in addressing the Traffic club here Thursday on "Economic and commercial conditions that produced the federal constitution." Continuing he said:

"There were in fact, two classes of people at that time—the commercial and the farming or wage-earning class. The commercial people made the constitution when a conference of the commercial interests was called, originally for the purpose of regulating commerce on Chesapeake bay. At that session a scheme was worked out for a meeting at Philadelphia for the secret purpose of forming a new government which would put control of government into the hands of property owners. Of the thirty-nine men who signed the constitution five-sixths were personally interested in the outcome of the conference and the adoption of the constitution.

"Nevertheless it was a good constitution and probably as just and as satisfactory for the time as it could be made. My point is, however, that it is not the sacred document it is supposed to be."
